Kristin McIvor and her husband say a condo deal fell through because their pet Zoey, a seven-year-old lab-boxer mix, exceeds the height restriction on dogs in a strata bylaw by two inches.
JENNIFER GAUTHIER/FOR METRO

Pooch too doggone tall for condo

Height restriction. Newlyweds had to look elsewhere for a home after a strata bylaw deemed their pet two inches too big

With just two inches, an accepted offer on a condo went to the dogs for a pair of first-time Vancouver homebuyers.

As renters who long had trouble finding dog-friendly apartments, Kristin and Steve McIvor had been looking forward to buying a space where their medium-sized pooch Zoey, a seven-year-old rescue dog, would be welcome.

The newlyweds were excited to finalize their offer at the new development at Fraser and 27th Avenue this spring when they discovered a strata bylaw states that dogs can only be 20 inches tall from the ground to the top of their shoulder.

They pulled out the measuring tape only to discover that Zoey, a lab-boxer cross, measures about 22 inches.

"We were told you were allowed to have two dogs," Kristin said. "But they don't tell you the fine print until you put in an offer."

They attempted to get an exception based on Zoey's calm demeanour (the McIvors even got reference letters from their vet), but since the building is new, strata bylaws could only be changed by a unanimous mail-in vote.

Out of 18 resident votes, two counted against Zoey.

The McIvors could have followed through with the deal in hopes the strata would change the bylaw at its annual general meeting, but they would have risked paying a $200 fine per week for contravening the rule.

"It's just such a strange rule because a height of the dog has nothing to do with the temperament," Steve said. "Really, the whole thing comes down to an inch on a dog."

The couple, who wound up spending $40,000 more to purchase a different condo in another part of town, hope their frustrating experience teaches other first-time buyers to look closely at strata bylaws before placing an offer and securing financing.

Stratas, which are governed by B.C.'s Strata Property Act, are allowed to make their own rules, including restrictions on pets. Strata bylaws overrule city bylaws when it comes to property use.

While city council will vote this week to find ways to make it easier for pet owners to find accommodating rentals, it's not clear whether any changes would affect strata properties.

Surrey boy, 5, in hospital

Woman turns herself in after hit-and-run

Surrey RCMP have arrested a woman in her 20s who turned herself in for a hit and run that left a five-year-old boy in intensive care with serious head injuries.

The woman was behind the wheel of a grey four-door 2005 Mercedes when the car struck the boy as he walked home from school in the Surrey neighbourhood of Fleetwood on Friday afternoon.

The woman, whose name will not be released until court information is sworn, turned herself in Saturday after police attempted to make an arrest at several addresses, Insp. Bruce Stuart said.

Witnesses told the media that the young woman appeared to be excessively speeding in the 30 km/h zone when the boy went out into the street. Tips from the public led police to the suspect vehicle, which was found in a driveway several blocks from the scene. It will undergo extensive mechanical and forensic inspection.

Police did not have an update on the boy's condition on Sunday, but his family said he remained in hospital on Saturday.

Officer in Taser case to stand trial for perjury

Public inquiry. Const. Bill Bentley, the first of four officers to stand trial, is alleged to 'repeatedly misrepresent what happened at the airport' after the 2007 death of a Polish immigrant

The first of four RCMP officers involved in the death of Polish immigrant Robert Dziekanski stands trial beginning Monday on charges of perjury related to a public inquiry into the case.

Const. Bill Bentley was among four officers who confronted Dziekanski in October 2007, stunning him multiple times with a Taser within seconds of arriving in response to a call about a man throwing furniture. Dziekanski died on the airport floor.

Commissioner Thomas Braidwood's final report concluded the officers used too much force and had no justification for using the Taser.

Several lawyers at the inquiry, including a lawyer for Dziekanski's mother and a lawyer representing the Polish government, accused Bentley and the other officers of outright lying — an accusation they all denied. In the end, the commissioner did not believe Bentley's testimony about why Dziekanski was stunned with a Taser.

Braidwood alleged Bentley's attempts to explain his inaccurate police notes were "after-the-fact rationalizations" that were "patently unbelievable," and he contended Bentley's notes and his statements to homicide investigators contained "deliberate misrepresentations made for the purpose of justifying" his actions. Braidwood also alleged Bentley displayed a "willingness to repeatedly misrepresent what happened at the airport for self-serving purposes," including at the inquiry

In May 2011, a special prosecutor approved perjury charges against Bentley, Const. Kwesi Millington, Const. Gerry Rundell and Cpl. Benjamin Robinson. The officers all pleaded not guilty and none of the allegations have been proven in court. Bentley's lawyer, David Butcher, said at the time the charges were approved that there was "no substance to the allegations at all."

Bentley, who started working as an RCMP officer in the spring of 2006, is the first to stand trial. Separate trials are scheduled for the others this coming November and February of next year.

Premier and cabinet get back to work

She's announced her cabinet and the Kelowna riding where she'll run in a byelection — now it's time for Premier Christy Clark to get to work after a long election campaign.

Government spending and education will be top of mind as Clark and her executive council nominees get formally sworn in by the lieutenant governor in Victoria on Monday morning.

Bill Bennett, minister of energy and mines, will start conducting a core review of spending and services, one of the B.C. Liberals' campaign promises.

Premier Christy Clark
THE CANADIAN PRESS

The "exhaustive" look at how taxpayer dollars are spent by ministries and Crown corporations is the first such review since the Liberals came to power in 2001, according to Bennett.

The review comes after Clark announced a larger 19-member cabinet on Friday, made up of both rookie and veteran MLAs.

And newly elected Surrey-Fleetwood MLA Peter Fassbender, longtime mayor of Langley, will have one of the most challenging files during his first stint in provincial politics as minister of education.

Fassbender must work to negotiate a new collection agreement with the B.C. Teachers' Federation, which has been talking with the government since February. Clark wants to sign a 10-year contract with the teachers, who note that per-student funding in B.C. has fallen to the lowest level in Canada over the past decade.

"Any successful agreement will have to address the chronic underfunding in B.C. schools that has left parents scrambling to fundraise millions of dollars to supplement inadequate learning resources, and teachers struggling to meet diverse student needs in overcrowded classrooms," BCTF President Susan Lambert said in a statement.

Civil claim. Woman puts legal screws on Costco after finding bolt in pie

A B.C. woman is suing Costco after she cracked her teeth on a metal bolt baked into her pumpkin pie.

On Thanksgiving Day 2007, Kelowna student Caleigh Davis was enjoying a slice of the superstore's coveted pumpkin pie when she chomped down on a metal bolt, according to a notice of civil claim filed in B.C. Supreme Court on May 30.

The impact of the bite reportedly cracked Davis' molars on her right side, leaving her with nerve damage, severe migraine headaches, nausea, blurred vision and insomnia.

The document states the pie, which Davis' mother had purchased from Costco a few days earlier, was served to Davis freshly out of the package, and Davis "had no knowledge of a defect/contaminant in the product." ELIZABETH HAMES/FOR METRO

100,000 Vancouverites get sauced on Italian Day

Venetian Carnival. Authentic festival featured bocce, fashion, food, music and more

Vancouver may be one of Canada's multicultural hubs, but everyone was Italian on Commercial Drive over the weekend.

More than 100,000 Italians and honorary Italians converged on the Drive Sunday to celebrate the neighbourhood's history during the fourth annual Italian Day.

"For one day, no matter what culture you're from, you can be Italian," said Brunella Fuoco, a director of the event.

The current incarnation of Italian Day had its inaugural year in 2010, more than two decades after the original annual Little Italy celebration shut down.

"They brought it back in a bit of a North American parody of (Italian culture)," said Fuoco.

However, Fuoco said the event has transformed over the years to become more true to Italian tradition and culture.

With bocce ball, a fashion show showcasing Italian design, opera-style entertainment and cooking demonstrations featuring well-known Vancouver chefs, 2013 was the most authentic yet.

Adding to the spectacle, this years theme, Venetian Carnival, had masked beauties in extravagant dress trotting up and down the Drive in stilts.

"It's about embracing multiculturalism," Fuoco said. "Really, it's about unity."

South Africa prays for 'father of nation'

Nelson Mandela. Anti-apartheid leader battles grave infection; in serious condition

Nelson Mandela received visits from family members on Sunday at a hospital where the former president and anti-apartheid leader was being treated for a recurring lung infection, while South Africans expressed their appreciation for a man widely regarded as the father of the nation.

There was no official update on 94-year-old Mandela after his second night in the hospital. His condition was described as "serious but stable" on Saturday.

The office of President Jacob Zuma had said that Mandela was taken to a Pretoria hospital after his condition deteriorated at around 1:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The anti-apartheid leader has now been taken to a hospital four times since December, with the last discharge coming on April 6 after doctors diagnosed him with pneumonia and drained fluid from his lung area.

Mandela was freed in 1990 after 27 years as a prisoner of white racist rule and won election to the presidency in all-race elections in 1994. He retired from public life years ago and had received medical care at his Johannesburg home until his latest transfer to a hospital. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada celebrates decade of same-sex marriage

Ten years ago, their unprecedented wedding stood for hope, equality and inclusion.

A decade later, Michael Leshner and Michael Stark — Canada's first legally married same-sex couple — believe the battle to have their union recognized by the courts has made it easier for today's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Canadians to feel accepted.

"Once you have marriage you have full equality. That was won that day," said Leshner.

The pair's quick civil ceremony in Toronto came just hours after Ontario's Court of Appeal pronounced the Canadian law on traditional marriage unconstitutional on June 10, 2003.

While Ontario was the first to legally recognize same-sex marriage, many other provinces followed soon after. Two years later, the federal government legalized same-sex marriage countrywide with the gender-neutral Civil Marriage Act. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Turkish PM's taunts bring more protesters to streets

After the speech. Tens of thousands pack into Taksim Square; thousands more flood Ankara's central square

In a series of increasingly belligerent speeches to cheering supporters Sunday, Turkey's prime minister launched a verbal attack on the tens of thousands of anti-government protesters who flooded the streets for a 10th day, accusing them of creating an environment of terror.

Recep Tayyip Erdogan made the most inflammatory of his speeches as he arrived in the capital, Ankara. Erdogan belittled the protesters, again calling them "capulcu," the Turkish word for looters or vandals. He made his speech in Ankara on an open-top bus, which then drove into the city in a motorcade.

Anti-government protesters have turned Erdogan's label of them as "capulcu" into mocking slogans, printing stickers with the word, scrawling it on their tents and uploading music videos onto social-network sites.

China. Nobel laureate's wife calls brother's jailing vendetta against family

A court sentenced the brother-in-law of China's imprisoned Nobel Peace Prize winner Liu Xiaobo to 11 years in prison Sunday — an unusually harsh punishment for a business dispute that Xiaobo's wife immediately decried as a vendetta against the whole family.

The court in suburban Beijing found Liu Hui guilty of fraud in a real-estate dispute and issued the sentence after a brief hearing.

Liu Xia, the defendant's sister and the Nobel laureate's wife who is herself under house arrest but who was allowed to attend the trial, wept as she briefly stood and spoke to reporters outside a car that was bringing her home from the hearing.

Family members and their supporters have said the prosecution of Liu Hui is meant as further punishment of the Nobel laureate's family and is intended to intimidate other political activists.

Lawyers for the brother said he and another business partner were accused of pocketing three million yuan (about $500,000) that was claimed by another party to the transaction. According to the lawyers, the money has since been returned, and police after first investigating the case last fall dropped it and then revived the charges early this year.

Journalism. U.S. state snooping prompts debate on source protection

A scandal over state snooping on journalists in the United States is prompting media-watchers to consider new techniques to protect sources.

Anonymity of sources is considered sacrosanct among journalists and essential to their safety, reputation, and ability to act as public whistleblowers.

But journalists are lagging when it comes to protecting sources in the digital era, critics say.

"There is a general lack of awareness (among journalists) about what ubiquitous surveillance looks like," said Jonathan Stray, who teaches at Columbia University. Everything from the websites you visit, the calls you make, and even your phone location are logged somewhere, Stray said. The same applies to reporters. Whistleblowers are at particular risk. A week ago, The New Yorker unveiled Strongbox — a secure way for people to leak information to them.

Defence survey to shed light on silent crime

Results of an anonymous survey to be released in the fall by National Defence will shed more light on the extent of military sexual assault, including what has been called the silent crime of male-on-male rape.

Almost 68,000 troops, 86 per cent of them men, were asked last year to voluntarily complete the Canadian Forces Workplace Harassment Survey. It asks their gender, years of service and rank, along with 100 questions ranging from personal harassment to whether they have been raped. It's the first such survey since 1998. Results could provide valuable insight into the extent of sexual violence in the Canadian military — an issue that former soldiers and others say is rarely reported. The extent to which men are sexually assaulted by other men is even more cloaked in silence, they say.

The Guardian. Ex-CIA employee Edward Snowden said his motive was to 'inform the public'; he's outed at his own request

A former CIA employee and National Security Agency contractor is the source of The Guardian's disclosures about the U.S. government's secret surveillance programs, the British newspaper reported on Sunday.

The leaks have reopened a debate about privacy concerns versus heightened measures to protect against terrorist attacks, and led America's NSA to ask for a criminal investigation.

The Guardian said it was publishing the identity of Edward Snowden, 29, a former technical assistant for the CIA and current employee of defence contractor Booz Allen Hamilton, at his own request.

"My sole motive is to inform the public as to that which is done in their name and that which is done against them," Snowden said.

The NSA has been collecting the phone records of hundreds of millions of Americans.

U.S. President Barack Obama has said the programs have been authorized by Congress and are subject to supervision. "What I can say is that in evaluating these programs, they make a difference in our capacity to anticipate and prevent possible terrorist activity," Obama said.

"Much of what I saw in Geneva really disillusioned me about how my government functions and what its impact is in the world," Snowden said. "I realized that I was part of something that was doing far more harm than good."

The Guardian reported that Snowden was working in an NSA office in Hawaii when he copied the last of the documents he planned to disclose and told supervisors he needed to be away for a few weeks to receive treatment for epilepsy. He left for Hong Kong on May 20 and has remained there. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His background

Edward Snowden said that he lacked a high-school diploma and enlisted in the U.S. Army until he was discharged with broken legs after a training mission.

- After leaving the army, he got his foot in the door with the NSA working at a covert facility at the University of Maryland. He was a security guard.
- He then worked for the CIA in information technology. By 2007, he was stationed in Geneva, Switzerland, where he had access to classified documents.

iRadio music service, iOS update expected at Apple conference

San Francisco. New look for iPhones, iPads could be most radical design change to mobile software since 2007

Apple is expected to reveal a digital radio service and changes to the software behind iPhones and iPads on Monday as the company opens its annual conference for software developers.

Apple hasn't said what it will unveil at the Worldwide Developers Conference in San Francisco. But the major announcements are expected during Monday's keynote presentation. Last year, Apple used the conference to announce its own mapping service, better integration with social networks and improvements to virtual assistant Siri. It also announced thinner MacBooks with high-resolution screens. The conference runs through Friday.

This year, Apple is expected to show off a simplified look on iPhones and iPads. If the speculation is correct, it would be the most radical design change since the iPhone made its debut in 2007, showing consumers that phones could do much more than make calls and exchange messages.

This week's event comes at an important time for Apple. The company's stock price has fallen amid concerns that another breakthrough product isn't imminent. Although CEO Tim Cook has said people shouldn't expect new products until the fall, Apple is likely to preview how future products will function in its unveiling of new services and features.

Monday's highlight is expected to be an updated version of iOS, the software that runs iPhones, iPads and iPod Touches. It will be called iOS 7 and will come with new devices expected to go on sale this fall. Owners of recent models such as last fall's iPhone 5 will likely be eligible for free upgrades.

- Observers think Apple will debut a music-streaming service dubbed iRadio, and that it will be most similar to Pandora, an advertising-supported service that plays songs at random within certain genres for free.
- However, the Apple service is expected to feature a seamless way for listeners to purchase songs through iTunes.

Federal agency stops investigating deadly anthrax

Canada's food regulator is no longer getting involved in cases of anthrax, a disease that can kill cattle, bison, other grazing animals and, in rare cases, people.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency says it will no longer investigate and quarantine anthrax-infected farms, collect samples for testing, vaccinate livestock or oversee and help pay for the cost of disposing animals that die of the disease.

New rules that went into effect this spring say livestock producers, with the help of private veterinarians, are expected to take responsibility for preventing and dealing with anthrax.

Anthrax is caused by naturally occurring bacteria in spores in soil. The spores can become active during hot weather that follows heavy rains or flooding. Animals that ingest the spores can get sick and die very quickly. THE CANADIAN PRESS

THE PROSTITUTION SOLUTION

URBAN COMPASS

Paul Sullivan
vancouver@metronews.ca

When you live or work in downtown Vancouver, especially within hailing distance of the Vancouver Art Gallery, street protests are a daily thing.

There's always someone marching down the street, beating the drum for this or that cause, and they always end up on the steps of the Art Gallery, where they subject themselves to an extended harangue from the most articulate of their number, and then disperse to march again another day.

Quite often, the same fierce and sincere advocates are at the front of the parade even if the cause changes. Some people just can't resist the appeal of the drum and the bullhorn.

I have to admit, I'm jaded. You've heard one bullhorn and drum song, you've heard 'em all.

Except for Saturday's sex trade worker march calling for the decriminalization of prostitution.

I mean, let's have more protests where they march under bright red umbrellas in bright red boots, sporting devil's horns or wearing jaunty hats that read: Bad Girl. And one of the main activists, Toronto's Terry-Jean Bedford, is called a "retired dominatrix." I wonder if they gave her a goodbye gold whip?

You have to be an expert at the Pivot Legal Society to figure out the nuances of the Supreme Court deliberation coming up this week, but as far as I can tell, the eminent justices are charged with sorting out the rules governing sex for sale.

Good luck with that one, your eminences.

Currently, prostitution is kind of legal but most of the activities surrounding it aren't. The government can't run a peanut stand, and, apparently, it's not much of a pimp either.

It's legal to be a prostitute, er, sex trade worker, but it's not legal to "communicate" for the purpose or do it in the warmth, comfort and safety of a "bawdy house".

And it's not legal to buy sex either. It's like Alice in Wonderland for grown-ups. At least, everyone says they're over 18.

So you can see why they put their red boots on and march.

As amusing as all this seems, there's a deep dark side — Willie Pickton was able to prey, apparently at will, on sex workers on the street because so many were alone and vulnerable. A regulated sex industry would make it tough for the sickos to operate.

That's reason alone to decriminalize the sex trade.

Set up the brothel next to the casino and hire a retired dominatrix or two to run things. And while you're at it, stock the shelves at the liquor store with government-regulated marijuana.

If that doesn't take care of the deficit, nothing will.

"My bawdy. My business," reads the sign.

Over to you, Supreme Court of Canada.

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate people, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one:

Secret riddles, world travel, a frantic dash to the finish line? No, it's not the DaVinci Code. It's a fundraiser in support of the BC Lung Association called the RUSH (Race & Urban Scavenger Hunt)!

On June 15, two-person teams will embark on the RUSH with a roadmap of clues leading them into fun and unusual challenges — from scaling a three-metre wall, boot-camp style, to attempting stand-up yoga-paddle boarding. More than 150 teams have already signed up.

"It's really great to get young people involved and thinking about their lung health," says BC Lung Association Development Manager, Chris Lam, adding one in five British Columbians is affected by a lung issue.

"You can grab your best friend, your wife, your boyfriend and go and do something fun and active, exploring your city — and it's all for a great cause."

The first team to complete this epic race wins a trip for two around the world. But every participant will take home the real treasure — knowing that they're helping people across their beautiful province breathe easier. Check out rushvancouver.com for more information.

George Stroumboulopoulos' new CNN talk show premiered Sunday night. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Strombo brings style to CNN

Network sea change.
New mandate and management has the purveyor of American news looking to branch out into new territory

It's a safe bet that George Stroumboulopoulos will be the first male CNN personality to wear two earrings and a skull ring from a designer who made one for Keith Richards.

Stroumboulopoulos, whose new nighttime talk show premiered Sunday, is more curious than dangerous, though.

The show gets a solid time slot for its debut, airing after the season finale of Anthony Bourdain's successful Parts Unknown. Then it will settle into a regular spot on Fridays at 11 p.m. Eastern for the summer and, if things go well, maybe beyond.

This is part of CNN's attempt to branch out beyond news programming at certain times, represented most prominently by Bourdain's show. The effort started before the arrival of new network boss Jeff Zucker — Stroumboulopoulos had his first contact with the network last summer before Zucker arrived — but the enthusiasm continued with the change in management.

Stroumboulopoulos already hosts a nightly talk show on the CBC, where his friendly style seems to encourage celebrities to open up.

"I hope that people pick up something new about the person I'm interviewing and find out a way to relate to them," he said. "I want them to find a connection."

For CNN, the show represents an old style for a new generation. Stroumboulopoulos, 40, said his interest in politics was fuelled less by politicians than by listening to the Clash and Public Enemy. He's eager to interview Snoop Lion, the former Snoop Dogg, on his show because he considers him such an important figure in hip-hop.

Rap artist Wiz Khalifa, comic Martin Short and actor Keanu Reeves were the guests on his first show.

Other confirmed interviews for the show's 10-week run include Betty White, Bill Maher, Sharon Stone and filmmaker Werner Herzog.

The show will tape before a studio audience in Los Angeles. Stroumboulopoulos said he's not gunning for the job of CNN's other general interview program, Piers Morgan, and said he likes the way Morgan conducts interviews.

For the moment, he'll fit the CNN show in with a schedule that includes the CBC show (which airs twice in the evening) and a weekly music and talk program he does for a CBS radio station.

"This is what I do," he said. "I don't even have any dependents in my life. I don't even have a plant."

Let's go ride a bike

Welcome your kids to the wheel world

YummyMummyClub.ca CEO and avid Cadbury Bicycle Factory supporter Erica Ehm speaks to the unexpected education one can acquire on a bicycle.

What can young ones learn from getting on a bicycle for the first time this summer?
The first bike ride is a real bonding moment between parent and child. It's really their first big opportunity for independence. It's a very special moment. It can be tough for them at first — but it teaches persistence and fitness. It's a very important message to instill in your kids, that it's important to go out and play. METRO

In Africa, bicycles have a profound impact on students' lives. A bike can cut travel time to school by up to four hours a day.

New study. Our expert weighs in on a report claiming moms who work outside the home enjoy better mental and physical health

IT'S ALL RELATIVE
Kathy Buckworth, kathybuckworth.com

Women who have kids and work full time have been found to have better mental and physical health by 40. ISTOCK

A recent survey found women who worked full time outside the home after having children had better mental and physical health by age 40 than those who had not.

This has of course raised interest, as one might assume that working full time while managing a family would be more stressful, and stress is a known factor in contributing to mental and physical challenges.

It would appear that this isn't necessarily accurate. Why would this be?

Personally, I'm not entirely surprised by the findings. I think Albert Einstein had stay-at-home moms in mind when he defined the word "insanity" as "doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

Have you ever been at home with young children? Have you tried to get them to clean up their rooms, pee into the toilet or stop hitting their sister?

No matter how many times they are told (clearly it is not "nagging" when it is simply giving them excellent advice), the outcome is often the same.

Nothing changes. At least not immediately, and not without years of bribing and threats.

Add to that the fact that my research (I drove around a bit) shows that there isn't a big list moms can carpool to at the end of the day in order to check off: a) continued successfully raising child, b) ensured food was edible and in good portion size and c) minimum health standards were met.

Many moms at home just don't get to feel that sense of accomplishment that comes with actually moving something forward and affecting change. Not in the short term, at any rate, and one of the most distressing things a parent of young children can hear from parents of older children is that it "never gets easy."

There's no such thing as a performance review when you're on the home front: except for the ones you get from snarly teenage girls who aren't necessarily focusing on your positive attributes, as the ones in a professional work environment might. Unless, "You suck" is now a good thing in the way that "that's so sick" has become. (I do try.)

The reward system for moms at home also leaves something to be desired. In that there really isn't one, except for the playground high fives you exchange with a friend when your kid wasn't the one kicking someone else off the slide.

Compare this to the workplace, where most employees can expect to be treated with a modicum of respect, have performance reviews which don't include door slamming (to be fair, there aren't any doors in most cubicles), and best of all, they get to take on new responsibilities with the positive achievement of old ones.

Being relieved at duties you've perfected is something moms at home never get to experience. Until the kids are the ones to leave home, that is.

Kicking it off once the cap comes off

The parties, the pictures, and now, a profession? How to get your game face on after graduation

For post-secondary graduates receiving degrees and diplomas in the weeks ahead, excitement over completing their programs may be tempered by the grim job landscape for Canada's young people.

The latest labour force survey from Statistics Canada revealed a decline of 19,000 jobs for youth aged 15 to 24 in April. The youth unemployment rate was at 14.5 per cent last month, little changed compared to a year earlier and more than double the national average. "When you see numbers like that, it can often give you the impression there really aren't many jobs available in your area," said Shirin Khamisa, a Toronto-based career counsellor and founder of Careers by Design.

"Be very realistic and realize there is a general climate where there are less jobs, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to secure a job that's right for you."

Khamisa and other experts share three ways for job-seeking grads to distinguish themselves in a competitive job market and work toward kick-starting their careers.

Graduating can be exciting ... and a little nerve-racking. Looking for job leads? Try networking with industry professionals. ISTOCK

Build a network

Do you have any professional contacts in your area of study or field of expertise? If not, there's no time like the present to start making connections. Attending industry events, joining a professional umbrella organization or engaging with individuals working in the field to ask about key needs in their area — and how you can fill them — could help build your network, said Khamisa.

"That's the really powerful thing in a job search when it's a tighter market — to get that face time with people who are in the field you'd like to work in." Another good way to obtain information and build a network is through informal interviews, said Bruno Castilloux, manager of career services at the University of Ottawa. He suggested researching the company of interest to craft precise questions before calling to speak briefly with a representative to learn more.

Keep connected

While many people will be keen to "jump right into job-search mode," Khamisa said that's not the best way to start a relationship with a potential contact. Khamisa said the job search should be a time of exploration. It's often easier when individuals are initially seeking out information and learning about a particular industry and the needs of an organization before hunting for a specific position, she noted. "Reaching out and connecting takes courage ... and I guarantee you there will be times where people don't get back to you or are just too busy or aren't receptive," she said.

"But the magic happens when you persevere and you keep going. And eventually, you will connect with a group of people who will help you and support you as you move forward." Khamisa added she once had a client who developed 10 contacts through cold calling. She continued to keep in touch over several months and ended up getting three different job offers. Placing a phone call isn't just limited to maintaining professional contacts.

When individuals reach the stage where they're submitting applications, a followup call is another way to show initiative, said Danielle Bragge, a partner with The Headhunters, a Canadian recruitment firm. It doesn't have to be aggressive. The process can be as simple as an introduction, mentioning your interest in the opportunity you've applied for and highlighting three quick reasons you'd make a great addition to the team, Bragge said. "When we do get those calls, I tell you, it takes the resumé from the bottom of the pile to the top of the pile." Bragge said while most resumés are directed to human resources, it's worthwhile to make the effort of placing the call. "It may not go anywhere, but it's the difference between great and ordinary. The thing that amazes me is how few people do that ... even your solid business professionals."

Don't give up!

"Be very realistic and realize there is a general climate where there are less jobs, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to secure a job that's right for you."

Go digital

- Many organizations use social networking sites like LinkedIn for recruitment purposes, but Khamisa said establishing an online profile can offer added benefits.
- Beyond fostering connections, job seekers can be exposed to professional groups who convene online, she noted.
- In many fields, social media and other tech-related skills are becoming increasingly necessary for doing an effective job and working efficiently, Khamisa said.
- She recommended observing how others in the field are making use of digital tools as a key first step. Bragge said those with an existing online presence — such as a Facebook page — should ensure that they "clean up" their social media profiles because prospective bosses could be watching.

MLS. Vancouver loses game, veteran centre back in Saturday match against Seattle Sounders

cam.tucker@metronews.ca

It could be a lose-lose situation for the Vancouver Whitecaps.

The local Major League Soccer side dropped a 3-2 loss to the Seattle Sounders FC in a Cascadia Cup derby match before a crowd of 53,679 fans at CenturyLink Field on Saturday evening, and also lost veteran centre back Andy O'Brien to injury in the second half.

With the 33-year-old O'Brien on the sidelines, the Sounders scored the equalizer in the 70th minute and the winner in the 81st minute.

"I felt we were really comfortable in the game and doing pretty well, but the turning point was losing Andy O'Brien," Whitecaps head coach Martin Rennie told reporters following the match.

"When we lost him the game opened up. We were disjointed."

The loss of O'Brien could prove costly in the long run should he be unavailable as a result of the injury.

A strong and experienced player, O'Brien leads the club in minutes with 1,141 since the beginning of the regular season. He's proven time and time again to be the dependable backbone of the back line.

"He really contributes his veteran leadership," said Whitecaps goalkeeper Brad Knighton of O'Brien.

"We had guys playing out of position, which is something you really don't want when you are playing in front of an atmosphere of 50,000 people. It was a tough situation for us to put ourselves in. It was just a bit unlucky."

The loss of O'Brien could only add to a depleted group of centre backs.

Jay DeMerit ruptured his Achilles tendon in the season opener in early March and is now getting back to doing dryland training, while Brad Rusin is dealing with a calf injury.

Andy O'Brien looks to pass against the Charleston Battery on Feb. 16 in Charleston, S.C. The veteran centre back went down with an injury in the second half of Saturday's loss to the Seattle Sounders. RAINIER EHRHARDT/GETTY IMAGES

Moore ready to take on role as go-to receiver in bolstered corps

Nick Moore has stepped clear of the shadows and into the spotlight as a prime target on the B.C. Lions receiving corps.

Moore, who enters his third season with the Lions, had opportunity thrust upon him last year when Geroy Simon, the league's all-time leader in receiving yards, was reduced to the sidelines on separate occasions with hamstring injuries.

Moore had 32 catches in seven games for 399 yards and three touchdowns, including the first of his CFL career.

Simon was traded to Saskatchewan in January.

Moore is now pegged as a starting slotback in the Lions offence, which was bolstered at the receiver position during the off-season, most recently with the signing of Emmanuel Arceneaux.

"You've got to build on what you did last year," said Moore last week, as the Lions continued training camp in Kamloops.

Moore, who stands six-foot-two, said he hit the 205-pound mark during the off-season, spending about 12 hours per week in the weight room.

Stronger and heavier, Moore maintains that he hasn't compromised the skills needed for his position. "You still have to stay with the agility," he said. CAM TUCKER/METRO

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Try to realize that not everyone thinks or feels the same way as you. A clash of viewpoints is likely today but it will only be a problem if you insist that you are right and others are wrong.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may prefer to stick with what you know and trust today rather than take a risk on something new. That's up to you, of course, but it's also a shame because a little bit of courage could change your life completely.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Keep telling yourself that the changes now taking place are not nearly as bad as some people claim. As a matter of fact they could actually be beneficial, for you anyway, so make sure you have a positive attitude.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You are not as conformist as some people think and what you do over the next few days will prove that fact several times over. Expect a bit of a backlash though.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to give too much away today, especially on the work front where knowledge is most definitely power. The less others know about what you are up to the more likely it is your efforts will be a success.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
For some reason you are a bit more aggressive than usual, which could lead to confrontations at home and at work.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It's time to get serious about your long-term aims and that means, inevitably, getting rid of certain short-term aims that eat up your time and your energy.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The planets will smooth your path as the new week begins and you will find it quite easy to get your way both in the professional sphere and in your private affairs.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Try not to let little things annoy you today because if your temper gets the better of you there is no telling where it might lead. Whatever other people might say or do treat it all as a big joke.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If a commitment of some sort is not working out then maybe you should cut your losses and get out. It won't be easy but let common sense (and the contents of your wallet) guide you.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Some things can be put off indefinitely because they are not really important but you have been putting off something that MUST be forced through to a conclusion. Make this the week when you finally crack it.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Yes, all things are possible but don't get silly and change things for the sake of it today — chances are you will just have to change them back again later. SALLY BROMPTON
